At the heart of the artwork is a depiction of Cerberus, the three-headed guardian of the underworld in Greek mythology. James masterfully reinterprets this iconic figure, transforming Cerberus into a symbol of the indomitable forces of nature. The three heads of Cerberus represent the earth, sea, and sky, emphasizing the interconnectedness of all living beings.

Surrounding Cerberus is a series of cannons, their barrels pointed outwards. The title of the artwork, "Cannon Cerberus Mc 12," adds another layer of meaning to the composition. The "Mc" stands for "mega cannon," suggesting that the cannons in the artwork are not ordinary weapons, but instruments of immense power. The thick application of paint creates a sense of depth and texture, inviting viewers to engage with the artwork on a tactile level.

James's skillful brushwork is evident in the intricate details of Cerberus's three heads, the delicate petals of the flowers, and the weathered surfaces of the cannons. The artist's ability to render both the organic and the inorganic with equal precision demonstrates her exceptional technical abilities.

"Cannon Cerberus Mc 12" is not merely an aesthetic masterpiece; it is also a powerful environmental commentary that speaks to the pressing issues facing our planet. Through this artwork, James confronts the consequences of human activity on the natural world, urging viewers to reflect on their own relationship with the environment.
