Mill's Theory of Liberty

Mill's theory of liberty is based on the idea that individuals should be free to do as they please, as long as they do not harm others. Mill argues that this principle is essential for human flourishing. He believes that people need to be free to make their own choices in order to develop their own unique personalities and to live fulfilling lives.

Mill also argues that society has a duty to protect individual rights and freedoms. He believes that the government has a responsibility to ensure that individuals are not prevented from exercising their rights by others. He also believes that the government has a duty to protect individuals from harm, even if that harm is caused by their own actions.

It has been used to justify a wide range of policies, from the protection of free speech to the legalization of drugs. Mill's ideas have also been used to challenge the authority of the state and to promote individual autonomy.

Criticisms of Mill's Theory of Liberty
