

Surf Up Creepy Stuff: Desmond Cole's Ghost Patrol

Desmond Cole is a paranormal investigator and author who has been featured on a number of television shows, including "Ghost Hunters" and "Paranormal Lockdown." He has also written several books about his experiences investigating haunted places, including "Surf Up Creepy Stuff: Desmond Cole's Ghost Patrol." In his book, Cole shares his experiences investigating the Surf Up Motel in North Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, which is said to be haunted by a number of ghosts, including a young girl named Abigail.

Cole first visited the Surf Up Motel in 2008, after receiving a number of reports of paranormal activity from guests and staff. The motel is a small, family-owned establishment that has been in business for over 50 years. It is located on a quiet stretch of beach, and its guests are often families and couples looking for a relaxing vacation.

However, according to Cole, the Surf Up Motel is anything but relaxing. He says that he has experienced a number of strange and unexplained things while investigating the motel, including:

- Hearing disembodied voices
- Seeing apparitions
- Feeling cold spots
- Being touched by unseen hands

Cole believes that the Surf Up Motel is haunted by a number of ghosts, including a young girl named Abigail. Abigail is said to have died at the motel in the 1950s, and her ghost is said to have been seen wandering the halls of the motel ever since.

Cole has also investigated a number of other haunted places, including the Lizzie Borden House in Massachusetts and the Stanley Hotel in Colorado. He says that the Surf Up Motel is one of the most haunted places he has ever investigated. He believes that the motel's location, on a quiet stretch of beach, and its history of tragedy, have made it a haven for ghosts.

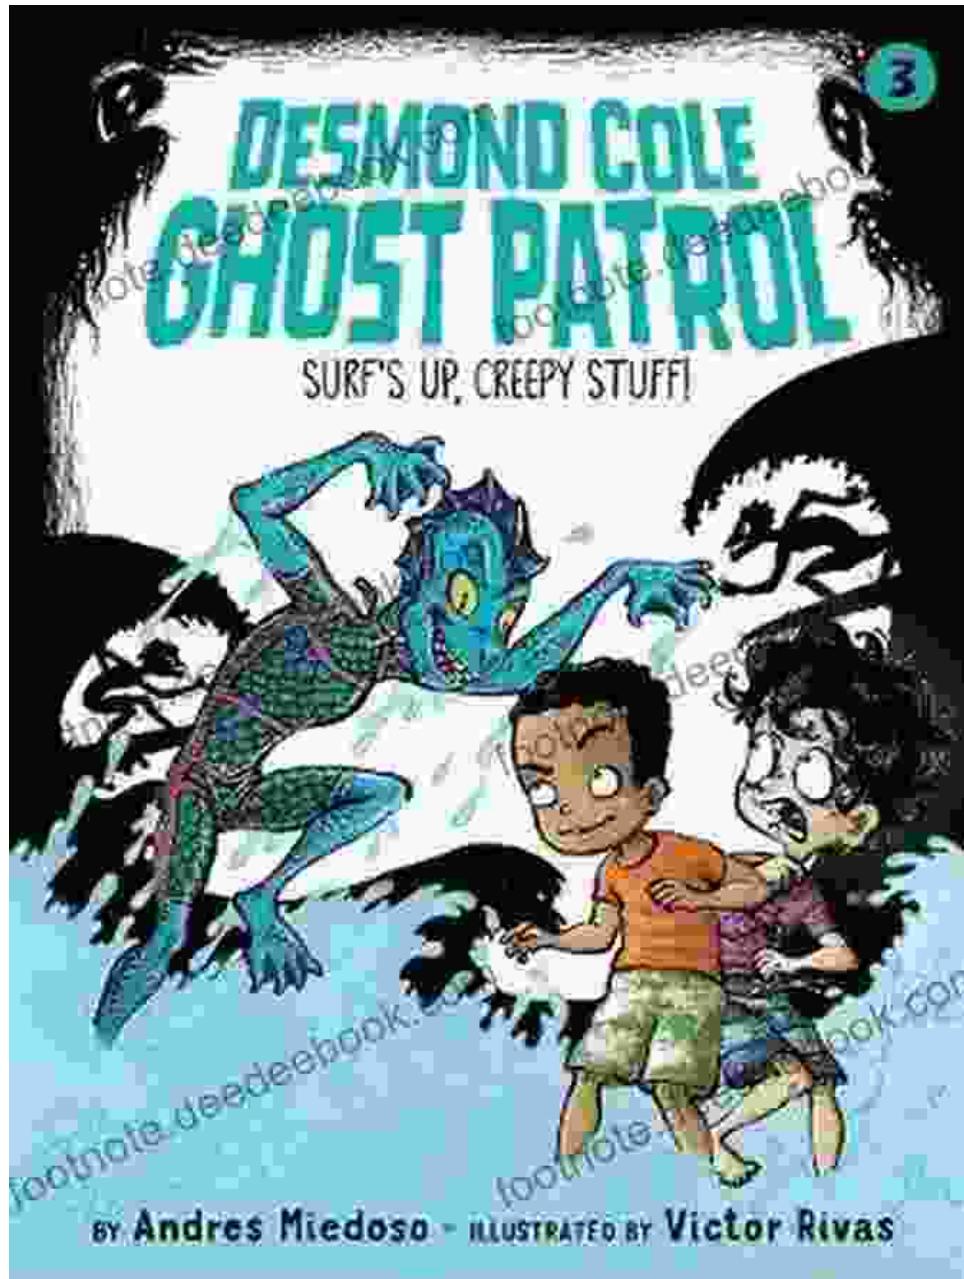

If you're looking for a truly spooky vacation, then the Surf Up Motel is definitely worth checking out. Just be sure to keep an open mind, and be prepared for anything...
